The Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 (ADEA)

- “The ADEA protects you if you are a job applicant or employee, age 40 or older. If you are an elected official, independent contractor, or military personnel, the ADEA does not apply to you.
- The ADEA says that employers must make all employment decisions based on someone's qualifications, not on their age. This includes every possible aspect of a job, including recruiting, hiring, firing, compensation, benefits, and all terms and conditions of the work.
- It also includes decisions about flexible work arrangements. Those decisions, too, must consider only your qualifications, not your age.
- Age discrimination can occur when an employer makes an ageist assumption about an older worker. For example, say that your employer assumes you will not work much longer. Therefore, he denies your request to telecommute from home. Your employer assumes that it won't be worth it to provide or train you to use the needed computer equipment. Your age is the reason for your employer's decision. That decision would be against the law.
- The ADEA covers employers with 20 or more employees. Most states and some localities have laws that cover smaller employers.”
